

Retail Profile

Employment Nelson Tasman

Introduction

Retail trade is one of the most important indicators of economic activity as a large proportion of consumers' money is spent on goods and services, and covers a wide range of businesses.

Shopping is a popular recreational activity, tourism and busy lifestyles place increasing importance on convenience and good service, within the retail sector.

The wholesale industry involves the selling of products in large quantities to retailers who then sell them on to the public.

Business in the wholesale sector is affected by downturns or increases in sales in the corresponding retail area.

Employment in the Industry

The retail industry currently employs approximately 1800 people.

- ◆ The method of selling goods and services is changing, with an increasing number of manufacturers selling direct to consumers, such as mail-order catalogues, television shopping and mobile shopping. If this trend continues it will result in more self-employment opportunities.
- ◆ The retail industry should be viewed as a career as there are great opportunities for rapid promotion and good earning potential for the right people.
- ◆ Work in the wholesale industry includes stock control, packing and dispatching in warehouses, buying and receiving goods in the retail outlets, and liaising between suppliers and retailers.
- ◆ Skills in dealing with people are transferable within the retail or service sector.

What Employers are Looking For

- ◆ Retailers look for people with a strong customer service focus, who are well presented with a positive and friendly attitude. A willingness to help the customer and good work ethics are essential.
- ◆ Most employers require their staff to be at least 16 years of age and to have a basic knowledge of maths. Cash handling skills are important.
- ◆ A personal interest in retail is important in pursuing career opportunities.

Current Skill Shortages

- ◆ Some supermarkets have difficulty recruiting check out operators.
